INSPIRING FACULTY

Growing up in inner-city Rochester, Rachel Santiago loved learning and was always curious about numbers. At age 14, she became a peer math tutor at her school. Her tutoring experiences led her to realize her passion for teaching. Now at MCC, Rachel teaches algebra online and in the classroom. She helps her students think about math problems in a different light by applying them to real-world situations. She also strives to establish a sense of community in her classes so that students build connections and help each other succeed. “I want them to look at me as a coach, as someone who wants nothing but the best for them.”

Before Agathi Georgiou opened her event planning company, Agathi & Co., she was a young woman with a passion to create. With the help of a few trusted advisors at MCC, Agathi quickly had a plan in place that would eventually lead her to earning a master’s degree and opening the doors to her own business. She remembers how a public speaking course at MCC helped her break out of her shell. “My professor taught me a lot about interpersonal communications. Today, my business depends on it!” She credits MCC with being that crucial first step in turning her talent into a fun and sustainable career choice.
